FRENCH FILM: Et maintenant où? 7th December at 6:30 pm

Nadine Labaki – 2011 – 101 minutes – Art House, Comedy, Drama

Amale (Labaki) runs a café in a small Lebanese village where the local women, both Christian and Muslim, get together to talk, swap ideas, and share grief as the number who've lost sons or husbands in frequent skirmishes continues to grow. The fighting between religious and political factions has been going on for years, and one day Amale and her friends decide it's time to stop talking about the fighting and do something to bring it to a halt.

The local women join forces to distract their men, convinced if they put their minds on other things they won't worry so much about killing. The women also realize they need to take a stronger stand if they intend to make their home safe again.
